THE fact of England's consenting to ro cognise the disputed territory to the cast of the Mekong as belonging to France does not at the first blush appear to redound very greatly to the diplomacy or firmness of the present cabinet, but when further details are received it will probably be found that Lord Salisbury has obtained some avid pro quo. The territory in question had certainly ceased to be of very much value to England since the wrongful cession by China to France of a strip to the north of it, as France had thereby slipped in a wedge between the British and Chinese frontiers and so left us with a detached bit of savage country bounded by the French possessions on the north, east, and south, and by the Mekong on the west. It had already been announced that with regard to China's wrongful cession of territory to France England would not look to the latter for redress, but would make China pay for her breach of faith by calling upon her to surrender territory on the Burmese frontier. The territory actually occupied by England on the east bank of the Mekong therefore became of little use ex-France in exchange for valuable considera-Lord Salisbury has obtained its full worth and that the conflict of British and French interests in Siam may now be terminated. The Rights of Aliens in Hongkong, Compiled by J. P. BRAGA. Hongkong: Noronha &

A FEW months ago a correspondence took place in the local press on the employment of Portuguese in the Post Office. Mr. Braga has collected all the letters, together with the editorial comments on them, and has published them with connecting notes of his own in this small volume, for which his follow countrymen will no doubt thank him. In addition to the newspaper correspondence, the book contains official correspondence relating to the nationality of children born of foreign parents in the British colonies, which took place in 1862, and also a tribute to the late Sir John Pope Hennessy, a Governor for whose memory Mr. Braga entertains the liveliest sentiments of admiration and gratitude, and whose portrait forms the frontispiece to the book. Mr. Braga expresses the hope that by these pages he will "have preserved from the halo of oblivion the memory of a Governor whose name is a household word in every Portuguese house in the Far East." "Halo of oblivion reads something like "a blaze of darkness." Another curious slip occurs in the preface, where the author is good enough to say that he does " not for a moment advocate the wholesale. employment of aliens to the detriment or exclusion of the true-born Briton; that would, probably, be as impossible of accomplishment as it would, possibly, be inexpedient." The selfsufficiency which these words imply, and the suggestion that the wholesale displacement of Britons by aliens would be only possibly inexpedient, were, we venture to think, not present in Mr. Braga's mind and arise only from misuse of words. On the whole, however, the author's English is correct and he discusses his subject, which is one on which he naturally We do not propose to argue on the views expressed, which would only be to re-open a disagreeable and profitless discussion. THIS is an account of three houseboat tours, from Shanghal to Hungehow and back via length, which would supersede the useless and Ningpo, from Shanghai to Le Yang via Soochow and the Tah Hu, and from Kinkiang to Wuhu. Mr. Kahler is a close observer and enquirer and has set down in much detail the narrative of his trips. This makes good reading in small doses, though its sameness makes it wearisome if too many pages are taken at once. The accounts of the "trips have previously appeared in the Temperance Union, of which Mr. Kahler is the editor; in reproducing them in book form the writer might with advantage have applied the pruning knife and cut out good deal of trivial matter that encumbers his pages. A notice of "My Holidays in China would be incomplete without mention of the illustrations; there are twenty six of them reproduced from photographs, and they form a very interesting collection.

JAPANESE AND CHINESI MACHINERY ORDERS.

The Brilish Trade | Journal says :- Our manufacturers are very reticent as to what is going on in regard to Japanese and Chinese orders. They cannot well conceal the heavy work given out, for that is self-evident, being too big to be hidden away in a corner. We have special reasons for knowing, however, that the general run of engineering industries, not only in military and marine material, but in tools, engineering appliances, and indeed all departments concerned in the rapid development of a country, are all being actively called upon, particularly on Japanese account. The other day one of our representatives met two Japanese officials as they were on the eve leaving Sheffield. They had been there a fortnight, during which time they had been making a round of the principal establishments. asking numerous questions and taking abundant notes of what they saw and heard. They have, further, left behind them a considerable amount of work, and there is little doubt that their inquiries will lead to a great deal more. "A very smart, bright, and intelligent pair of officials they were," says our representative quite ready to answer my questions as to what was going on in Japan, although thoy exercised judicious allence when the questions seemed to touch some point about which they desired not to give information. They both spoke English with remarkable fluency, easily understood everything that was addressed to them, much better even thun your German who has been years in this country. They told me that in their colleges at Japan the initial duty put upon them was to learn the English language. That has first to be done, for, said the principal of the two, we may get along without the other tongues, but not without English, and besides, he added, we have very many Englishmen in Japan, and there are still more Scotchmen, whom we have in responsible positions in our Government works. They told me that Japan was bent upon a systematic and prompt development of all the territories in her possession, and that for a very considerable time this country would be required to find the mechanical appliances for that purpose. When referred to the astounding advances the Japanese had made of late years, commercially and in a military sense, they seemed surprised. We have been studying England and English ways, one of them answered, 'for many years now, and what is now happening is but the natural result of those studies. Our young men have been coming to your colleges and other training institutions, and they have worked hard to get to know the secrets of Western progress. It would have been strange indeed f they had worked in vain.'
